#EoLIS2022

September 2022

It's a fact: wind turbines don't last forever. A large part of Europe's turbine fleet will come to the end of its operational life over the next 10-15 years.

Now we also have our new energy priorities to contend with. The war in Ukraine has put energy security to the forefront. We need to maximise our existing assets either through lifetime extension or repowering wherever we can.

So how much of this capacity can we repower? How much of it will be decommissioned? And is there a way to sustainably recycle all turbine material?

WindEurope's End of Life Strategies Seminar will shed some light on these vital questions. And it's taking place 1-2 December this year. Experts from across the industry and academia will be there, eager to share their own insights and to tackle these questions head on. And we'll be covering it from every angle in an extensive event programme - from circularity to composite materials, from blade recycling to offshore end-of-life.
