

Sebastian Kind is Mechanical Engineer from the National Technological University of Argentina (UTN), has a Master's degree in Renewable Energies from EUREC Agency in Brussels (Belgium), from Zaragoza University (Spain) and from Athens National Technological University (Greece). He has a degree in management development from IAE Business School (Argentina).

He has more than 15 years of expertise in the renewable energy industry. He has developed and is Director of the Master's in Renewable Energies from the UTN and advisor of the National Honorable Senate. He had a remarkable role in Senator Guinle's team, helping through the process of passing the new Argentinian Renewable Energies law, approved in September 2015.

He has been an advisor of wind power projects for the Ministry of Energy and Mines of Uruguay, a consultant for the Ministry of Energy of Chile and for the German Agency of Cooperation GIZ in subjects related to Renewable Energies and tender processes.

He had carried out executives positions in the private sector, in London as well as in Buenos Aires. Sebastian has published about thirty papers and dissertations on international congress.

He's currently working as Undersecretary for Renewables Energies at the Ministry of Energy and Mining.